Training your dog may seem like a major task at first, but once you settle on a training plan and gain a sense of routine, it'll get easier. Utilizing specific dog treats for training will become a big factor in letting your dog understand what they're doing right. Positive reinforcement is a popular technique and treats play a big role in facilitating good outcomes for puppies.

The first thing you need to decide is what type of treat your dog enjoys. Texture and flavor are the main components here. Does your dog enjoy chewy treats or bite-sized nibbles? Most training treats are eaten within a few seconds to enhance the timeliness of the training and to keep your dog motivated. Small treats are best for this technique, but if your dog is very receptive to a treat that takes a little longer to eat, that's okay too. The main goal of training is to let your dog know they did a good job at the right moment, and giving them their favorite treat is the best way to accomplish that.

We'll review our favorite types of treats for training below, including flavor, texture and the quickness of chewing.

1. Zuke's Mini Naturals Chicken Recipe

| BEST OVERALL

Zuke's training treats are about the size of the tip of your finger, which makes them a very quick chew. Their chicken flavor is a tasty choice for most dogs, but make sure your puppy doesn't have any allergies. The texture is soft, almost sponge-like, and is easily gobbled up by any good dog who enjoys positive reinforcement. Zuke's has a few other flavors to check out as well. This is our top choice for a training treat because of the size and the number of treats per package. Made with less than three calories, this grain-free treat is corn, soy, and wheat-free. Let your dog enjoy a healthy snack while learning how to sit and stay.
